DECKS CLEAR.

(Concluded from Second Page.) Delaware is not a very large State. There are only three counties in it. Here were three or four days to establish a fraud, if there was any, but not a word about it. It was never heard of until it was necessary to do something to make sixty a majority of 160. (Applause.) Then the fraud was discovered. Then the gentlemen came to the front, it is said, but no affidavit of that character was presented to the com-mittee, read and considered. If one was presented it was never heard of until that gentlemen brought them in his pocket 1,200 miles from his home, away from the pos-sibility of their being resisted, and then perhaps presented to the national commit-tee. According to my advices, none of them were read—certainly not in our com-mittee. We do not know whether they contain averments of this kind or not. Now, gentlemen, that is the case. If you turn out Addicks, the contestant, you will leave the State of Delaware without an organ-ization; there is no other party, there is no other power than that which is by the authority of these men that can call a State convention. Are you going to do it simply because some man says Mr. Addicks is not a sound Republican? Let me challenge a statement made by my friend from New Jersey. He said that this convention was the tribunal to determine upon the qualifications of its members. I deny it. I say that our constituencies determine the qualifications of their representatives.
There is a great principle involved in this.
The principle of the right of free representation, a right dear to all English-speaking people, and to secure which more of English and American blood has been shed than for all other questions put together.
(Applause.) Are we, a Republican convention, ready to abandon that now? I take it not.

THE TEXAS CASE. say that you, through your committee, through your national committee, have no evidence upon this case. A gentleman said that 141 of the delegates of that convention remained in their seats and selected the delegates. That your committee have candidate shall have received such majority stated. That was challenged, that was denied by another. The gentleman said that he would take the word of any Republican in a matter of this kind, a comment on their truthfulness that was very commentary, but what will he do when one Republican says yes and another Republican says no with reference to the same juestion, speaking almost at the same Ought he not to investigate the proofs. No gentleman did it; no man read an affidavit establishing or tending to establish these facts. The majority of testant. The others said that it was not prover. We did not take the words of the others, but we say that the case is not proven. It is claimed on the one hand, and about this there is no dispute, that there was a contest sharply defined, that the three candidates for the presidency had a following in about equal numbers. Finally two of them combined and there was a sharp contest over the control of the convention. After it was discussed pro and con upon a roll call upon which there ated price, as reported by the engineers and con upon a roll call upon which there is no dispute. Mr. Cuney was elected temporary chairman on this roll call by more than two and a half votes to one, indicating the resident freehold sureties of Jennings ing the temper of the convention. It is his contention that these men who thus declared themselves authoritatively upon the roll call, about which there is no dispute, were the men who supported him and his

ticket and gave him his overwhelming ma-MR. GROSVENOR'S SPEECH, General Grosvenor of Ohlo-Mr. President and gentlemen of the convention: The convention in Texas was assembled under a call issued by the chairman of the State committee. There is no dispute that it was regularly called, regularly assembled, no question of anything up to a certain point of time. A temporary chairman was nominated by each of the factions, but because of certain reasons Mr. Cuney was elected, as the record shows. A roll call was had and 800 and some odd members answered to their names and voted. Cuney was seated. A committee on credentials was appointed. Up to that time all parties were co-operating together and desiring to see that both sets of these delegates derived their title from a common source, the committee on credentials was sent out, and after two or three adjournments of the convention the committee on credentials came in with a report. A minority of the committee submitted a written minority report. Mr. Cuney ruled that the minority had no right to make a report and an appeal was taken from his decision and he refused to put the appeal to the house Thereupon he proceded, as the record shows, I hold it in my hand, and no honest man will deny it-that on more than twenty occasions he refused a division of the house: refused a call of the roll and re-corded every question by putting it on one side and finally a vote was taken upon the delegates at large, and at once an uproar broke out; more violence was immiat and Cuney, when the little subsidence had taken place waved a paper over his head, declared that the delegation was elected and that the convention had ad-journed; sixteen delegates went out with Cuney, 641 delegates stayed in the convenion, elected a temporary chairman, elected and sent out a committee on credentials made the temporary chairman permanent had a regular report of the committee on credentials, proceeded regularly to elect their delegates at large, the Grant delegates, certified them up here as the action of a convention that had never adjourned. Now comes this gentleman and appeals to an intelligent convention of American Republicans to seat the man that thus defied every principle of parliamentary law. I say, when the moment arrived that Cuney refused to grant a division of that house all that took place afterwards was a simple ssumption of power without a shadow of legal right or legal effect behind it. That CALLED RASCALS. "Nothing more damnable ever stained the ages of the records of an American convention. Now what are you about to do, gentlemen? There are 160 contests. Every one of them about an American citizen, as the gentleman from Iowa says, every one of them with some sort of vested right to something. Vested rights to work their way into a convention when two committees have said they shall stay out. Will you give two hours to each one of these cases? Ten hours a day is about as much as I am willing to work in this country.

And it will take forty days to try these contests, for if you open this question and defeat this report you must not after that go to drawing discriminations. You must hear the whole of them. We had thirty hear the whole of them. We had repre-cases of contests in the House of Repre-sentatives this year. Mr. Reed appointed sentatives this year. Mr. Reed appointed three more committees of nine members each, and they worked day and night, and at the end of the long session of Congress there still remained three or four undisposed of, and you are asked to stay here until the 1st day of August to decide whether Tom, Dick or Harry has the right of an American citizen. (Applause and laughter.) They have had a hearing before two committees of this body. Haughville, on Thursday, the 18th instant, at two committees of this body. The national committee spent four long days and nights and heard these appeals. They decided them as well as they could, and I stand here now to say that it is a little matter of cheap peanut policy to be condemning a great committee because, forsooth, the gentlemen may not have been able to inluence that committee as they thought they ought to. Another committee has spent all the time which it has reasonably to give to them, and this is the best that can be done. I stand here to say that no harm will come to the fair name of the Republican party if you succeed in relegating to private life the man of Delaware and the rascal of Texas. (Laughter, applause and hisses.)

A vote was taken on the minority report, ecommending the admission of Addicks delegation from Delaware, and it was lost. (Applause.) The question recurred on admission of the Cuney delegates of Texas, and it also failed to carry. (Applause.) The remainder of the minority report was rejected. The question on the adoption of the ma jority report was then put, and it was carried by a large majority. The result was received by almost universal cheering on the floor and in the gallery.

sacrifices, whereas the Detroit score shows thirty-four times at bat and one sacrifice It is practically impossible to correct the cause of this difference, for the actual play itself is not shown, but merely the result of it, with the movements of the ball whenever in the hands of any player. The score at the Grand showed that Motz had fifteen put-outs, while the report from Detroit gives him only eleven. This is a matter that appears to be simple carelessness, for the handling of the ball can be accurately shown. The record of errors was correct. shown. The record of errors was correct and the record of earned runs was shown as the Detroit report shows it. The game at the Grand gave McCarthy a three-base hit in his first time at bat, which scored Hogriever, but Detroit credits him with only a two-bagger.

Aside from these few differences the game was shown here as seen in Detroit. The report from Detroit does not cover many features of it. In the first Hogriever got his base on balls and was advanced by Roat's sacrifice and scored McCarthy's two-bagger. Hogan and Shiebeck got singles in the second and Motz a single in the third. In the fourth inning, after Hogan struck out, Shiebeck's single and Davis's three-bagger earned two runs. Stewart's single was the best that could be knocked out in the fifth, and it was not until the seventh that another hit was made, McCarthy getting a single. In the eighth Buckley and Hogan tapped the ball lightly, but the infield kept them from reaching first. In the ninth Davis made a single and made it good for two bases by Knoil's error. Hogan bunted and reached first while Davis was bunted first while Davis was bunted and reached first while Davis was bunt bunted and reached first while Davis was caught trying to reach third. Watkins then put in Big Bill Phillips to bat for Roat, hoping in this way to pull the game out. but Phillips sent the ball into Knoll's hands and this was followed by a fly into right field by McCarthy, retiring the side and field by McCarthy, retiring the side and a Hard Game.

There was some poor work and some very good work done by the champions. Davis started the fracas by giving four hits in the second inning which counted for three earned runs. In the third Roat's arm weaka fielding game as has been played here this season the leaders were beaten to-day by Vanderbeck's tigers. Wiley Davis, the squirrel hunter, of the Hoosiers, pitched a good game, but the visitors lost. It was the first defeat Davis has sustained, his record up to date being three won and one tied. Detroit won the game on its merits, earning four of the five runs scored. The The only man that scored in the seventh.

The only man that scored in that inning was Knoll, whom Roat ellowed to beat his throw of an easy grounder to first. Dungan then got a single and when Burnett went to bat Roat was given another chance to retire the side, but threw wild and Knoll scored. There were two outs when Knoll went to bat and Roat's throw of his grounder should have retired the side. The

RATS WHOSE TAILS ARE JOINED. They Toll Not, for Other Rats Supply Them with Food. Chicago Chronicle. It sometimes happens that a number of rats, to whom nature has been prodigal in matter of tails, get l extremities hopelessly d, so that no amount ingenuity can liberate them one from the other. Naturalists give the name "the rat king" to this curious entanglement of rodents. An examination of one of these curlosities showed that only the tails were entangled, but they were knotted together so closely that it was impossible to release certain parts. Careful examination showed that none of the talls had actually grown together. The explanation of the origin of these rat kings is as follows: The old rat es upon the tails of the young rats and throws the latter about with her snout, thus producing the first knot. As the young rats are helpless and do not move about much, a small quantity of clay or mud is sufficient to keep the tails united. As the tail of a rat grows very rapidly the tails will become inseparably entangled together in a short time. After a while quite a number of young rats are irretrievably joined together for life. How many individual rats compose a "rat king" is a question wholly of chance. The rats that have not olly of chance. The rats that have not len victims to the tail entanglement are kindly and loyal to their captive brethren. The name of "rat king" is due to the fact that the tail-tied rats live royally. They toil not, neither do they spin. The knots in their tails are their passports to a life of their tails are their passports to a life of Consolidated Exchange Bldg., Chicago.

The "rat kings" are made up of rats that are fat and well kept. This is due to the fact that their inability to lead an active and acquisitive life is recognized by their fellow rats that have managed to keep their tails free from pernicious entanglen infancy. The rats whose talls are un handicap work for the "rat king." They bring food to the tail-tied creatures to whom life is one long dream of luxurious

There seems to be no jealousy betwee the "rat king" and the rats whose ta are free. While the one is living an existence of absolute inaction and repose, the rats in possession of their liberty labor in the most unselfish way to make their tail-tied comrades forgetful of the fate to which the carelessness of their maternal protec-tor has subjected them.

SHE WILL NOT TALK.

Remarkable Portuguese Woman Who Leads a Hermit's Life.

San Francisco Call. Hermits are pientiful enough in all parts of California, but nearly all of them are men. For some reason the gentle sex sel-dom shows a desire to forsake the world and live in a leaky cabin on a desolate spot of the earth's surface with nothing but wild beasts for companions and a scant bill of fare. But there is one weman at least who prefers such a life. She is a Portuguese, and her name is Mme. Munier. Her home is in the sand hills on the Pacific coast, about fifteen miles below Pes-

Mme. Munier, in a way, leads a perfect termit's life. More so than a great many hermit's life. More so than a great many of the masculine hermits at present camping out in different parts of the State. Her home is far off the road and close to the waters of the Pacific. It is only a box-like shanty, built under the side of a sand hill so as to be protected from the ever-blowing wind. The surroundings are wild in the extreme, and nature shows herself in her most uncongenial mood. The house has only one room in which the self in her most uncongenial mood. The house has only one room, in which the woman eats, drinks and sleeps.

It is over twenty years since Mme. Munier came to live in the vicinity of her present home. Her husband, a Frenchman, was with her then, and they occupied a comfortable house with a small plece of land around it. After about three years M. Munier disappeared. He went away one morning, saving that he was going to San morning, saying that he was going to San Francisco, and has never come back. At least it is not known to the neighbors that he has.

After a few months of solitude in the little house Mme. Munier went out to the sand hillz and built herself the shanty that she still occupies.
The enly people that she has spoken to in all the years since her husband's departure are the storekeepers at different is knitting. If anybody calls on her she never stops, To ask her a question is like talking to a deaf person, as she never Mme. Munier is strong and healthy, and n good weather walks all the way to Santa cruz for her provisions. She carries arge basket on her back and when fille it will contain enough to last her for months. All the water she uses has to be carried a long distance, but she always many trips for the purpose.

People who know Mme. Munier look upon her as a mystery. Most of them incline to the belief that her husband has some reason for keeping out of sight, but visits he occasionally and brings her money. Bu none of them take enough interest to investigate and are content to let her live as she pleases in her little shanty in the sand hills.

His New Dignity.

Detroit Free Press. When Hustlety came down to his place of business the other morning he was la-boring under a high pressure of suppressed excitement "Can't be with you to-day," he promptly announced to his partner "Got to get right back home. Tell Ward that we can close that deal of our later. "But it's very important. Delay may "No matter. There are some duties stronger than that of making money. You know my married son lives next door to me, right in the same yard. There's sickness at his house. "Nothing serious, I hope."

"None too serious to suit me," and Hustlety, with his thumbs under his suspenders and armpits, strutted about the office, siry as a bird cage. "Got two nurses, two doctors, my wife, an old aunt and elegation of women from the neighbor-"The old monster." was the partner's mental comment, and he said aloud: "Then they can get along without you."
"Well, I should say not. It is an occasion that requires a general right on the spot. I tell the nurses what to do, make the old aunt go into the back yard when she wants to weep, keep the other women from holding a hen-cackling matinee in the house, let the doctors know I'm watching every move they make, and keep the hired neight in line. When the cat started upstairs this morning I threw it into a treetop, and it's there yet. When the dog barked I kicked him clear through the premises into the alley. When the delivery boy from the ry went whistling around the h f told him to shut up until further or I would crush every bone in his body When the ice man came with that weird and fiendish yell of his, I served like notice on him, and I've been paying a regular procession of hand organs to move on. Oh. I'm on guard, and when I hear a little, piping noise from upstairs and there is too much confusion. I feel just like keeping or-der with a shotgun."

"Aha! I see. It's a baby." "A baby," seornfully; "it's twins, man;" and the new grandpa swelled up like a toad swimming against the wind.
